

Long ago, a man called Carlito Lopez flew into the USA with a monkey under his hat.

Mr Lopez and his monkey started their journey in Lima, Peru. He seemed like a normal passenger - though he was wearing a very large woollen hat on a hot day. Neither the crew nor the other passengers knew there was a monkey on board the aircraft..

When the plane was safely in the air, the YOU MAY UNFASTEN YOUR SEATBELTS sign came on. Everyone relaxed. The cabin staff walked up and down the aisle

Mr Lopez took out a bag of nuts. His monkey climbed out from under the hat.

***

The monkey, named Chaplin, sat quietly on the man's lap for the rest of the journey. Nobody asked him to fasten his seatbelt.

The plane then refuelled in Fort Lauderdale, Florida. Mr Lopez and Chaplin tried to pass through a security check. A young security guard stopped them

'Can we I see your monkey's ticket and passport, please?'

'I'm sorry,' said the Mr Lopez.. 'Chaplin left his jacket at home.'

Quick Check: True or False?

1. A monkey flew from Florida to Peru
2. The monkey was wearing a hat.
3. The monkey did not stay under the hat.
4. The monkey did not have a pet passport
5. The man left his jacket at home.

Vocabulary

Match the words /phrases in bold with the these definitions

- 1) To loosen or unclip something
- 2) To provide more gas/petrol to continue a journey
- 3) Staff working on a flight